

E-MAIL POLICY

I consider all e-mails to me through the Brokerblogger weblog as a personal conversation, and therefore I will never reproduce it on my blog without your written consent; nor will I forward any e-mails you send me to a third party. I also expect you to keep e-mails from me to you confidential. If you are unwilling or unable to keep things private, then please do not e-mail me

The only exception to my e-mail policy that I can think of is this: If you send me an e-mail threatening me with any legal action or physical or emotional harm, then I will blog about it, and about you. My reasoning is that if you can't behave like an adult by refraining from sending nasty e-mails, then you don't deserve the privacy adults expect

I do, however, invite all opinions (through "comments" or e-mails), even the ones that totally disagree with mine.

THANK YOU for all good e-mails.
